ARTISTIC soul Steph Stewardson has found a way to combine her two great passions in life – painting and music.

In her most recent works, Stewardson combines her lifelong love of live music with a modern impressionist painting style using photos taken at concerts attended across Europe, America and Australia.

Working with acrylic on canvas, she creates large and dramatic pieces bringing to life the mood and the excitement of the moment.

“The result is an exciting journey which transports the viewer to concert halls, clubs and stadia across the world, so they feel as though they’re right there in the audience, feeling the energy and enjoying the music,” she said.

Stewardson’s latest series of concert paintings, It’s only Rock ‘n’ Roll . . . but I paint it, features artists such as the Rolling Stones, George Michael, Van Morrison, Lulu and Billy Joel.

It is on until March 31 at Freestyle Tout Emporium, 1000 Ann St, Fortitude Valley.
